The Deep State Strikes Back: Fake Outrage Over Signal Chat Leak

KABOOM! You knew it was coming. You didn't expect the Deep State agents burrowed deeply inside Wall Street, Big Tech, Big Media, the federal bureaucracy, the intel community, and the courts to simply surrender, to give up their schemes for a New World Order, did you? And they haven't. The lawfare targeting Donald Trump during the Biden administration has escalated now that he has returned to the White House. Radical attorneys from the ACLU, National Lawyers Guild, American Oversight, the Elias Law Group, and other DNC-aligned lawyers were all queued up on Trump 47's Inauguration Day to launch a tsunami of lawsuits aimed at hamstringing every effort and program of the new Trump administration. And, of course, these lawsuits are funneled into strategically selected courtrooms of left-wing judges, most of whom are Obama or Biden appointees. It's a steroid-enhanced replay of the lawfare against the programs of the Trump 45 administration.

Now we have the Ides of March ambush aimed at knee-capping Trump by taking down Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth over a Signal group chat concerning the pending U.S. military strikes on the Houthis in Yemen. The March 15 chat included Vice President JD Vance, Secretary of State Marco Rubio, Director of National Intelligence Tulsi Gabbard, and U.S. Special Envoy to the Middle East Steve Witkoff. Also, mysteriously on this chat was one Jeffrey Goldberg, editor-in-chief of The Atlantic magazine, one of the most influential voices in the Deep State's media echo chamber. Goldberg and The Atlantic are also fatally afflicted with Trump Derangement Syndrome and have proven they will do just about anything and everything to stop MAGA and transform it into Make America Grovel Again. How is it then that Goldberg was "invited" into this rarified atmosphere so that he could triumphantly post a story supposedly showing that Hegseth and the top Trump national security team had inexcusably compromised our nation's defense and jeopardized our military personnel?

Goldberg detonated his "bombshell" report for The Atlantic in a story titled, "The Trump Administration Accidentally Texted Me Its War Plans." Accidentally? Yeah, right. The Trump administration is going to "accidentally" include its mortal enemy in a high-level text chat on military operations? And all of the Deep State regime media is poised to jump on it and turn it into a cause célèbre that will dominate the news cycles?

And congressional Democrats were instantly ready to hold hearings excoriating Trump and demanding that Hegseth and National Security Advisor Mike Waltz be fired or resign?

No, this is clearly a choreographed Deep State intelligence op from top to bottom. Remember, this is the same Jeffrey Goldberg who, in 2020, claimed to have a reliable, anonymous source for his hit piece titled, "Trump: Americans Who Died in War Are 'Losers' and 'Suckers.'" The context of the story is that on a trip to Europe in 2018, Trump, according to Goldberg, refused to visit the Aisne-Marne American Cemetery of World War I servicemen. Goldberg alleges that Trump said, "Why should I go to that cemetery? It's filled with losers." He also claims Trump called those who died at the Battle of Belleau Wood "suckers." He also claimed that anonymous sources told him Trump had rejected the cemetery visit "because he feared his hair would become disheveled in the rain, and because he did not believe it important to honor American war dead."

It was a vicious election interference psyop that Goldberg's media allies turned into a pro-Biden/anti-Trump campaign issue, particularly aimed at peeling away military veterans from the Trump camp. There were obvious major problems with the Goldberg story that should have given any editor pause. First, there were plenty of people on the trip with Trump who flatly — and on the record — denied the anonymous sources. (If indeed there even were any "sources." It's more believable that Goldberg's account is a total made-to-order fabrication.) For more on the Goldberg "Losers and Suckers" smear, see R. Cort Kirkwood's excellent piece, "Did Atlantic Editor Crib Godfather 2 for Hit Piece on Trump?"

Back to the current smear. As I write, I am watching the House Intelligence Committee live hearings on the Signal "scandal." On Tuesday it was the Senate Intelligence Committee. More similar hearings are on the way. The same far-left Democrats who looked the other way while Joe Biden let millions of unvetted migrants surge into this nation, degraded our military services and intelligence agencies with DEI programs, gave Chinese CCP spies access to our most sensitive secrets, allowed a Chinese spy balloon to traverse the entire country including flying over our military bases, and carried out the humiliatingly incompetent and deadly retreat from Afghanistan — suddenly these same hate-America Democrats are "outraged" over this Signal chat? They desperately needed something like this. They have been back-peddling and fighting among themselves, engaged in circular firing squads, since the election. Trump's executive order blitzkrieg and Musk's DOGE efforts have left them ineffectively screaming and fuming. Now they have a pony they think they can ride.

But what does the Goldberg/Signal episode really show? So far, the Trump administration publicly is going along with the Goldberg/Democrat/media narrative that Goldberg's inclusion in the Signal chat was "accidental," the fault of a lower-level staffer under Mike Waltz on the National Security Council. Hmm. Something doesn't pass the smell test. One would assume that Trump and Pam Bondi already have Kash Patel and the FBI on this. Recall that during Trump 45 we had the New York Times September 2018 op-ed by "Anonymous" titled, "I am Part of the Resistance Inside the Trump Administration," in which the unnamed author claimed to be one of many inside the bureaucracy who were daily sabotaging their boss, the duly elected President of the United States. Turns out "Anonymous" was one Miles Taylor, briefly chief of staff at DHS. After doing what damage he could, Taylor resigned in 2019. He was rewarded with media accolades, book deals, a term membership at the Council on Foreign Relations, a stint as CNN commentator, and a lucrative gig as chief of Google's advanced technology and security strategy. Unfortunately, treason and subversion often pay. His Wikipedia entry doesn't say "Miles Taylor (traitor); it says "Miles Taylor (security expert)." For more truthful background on Taylor see here and here.

Speaking of the Swamp's "security experts," we don't want to forget Kris Krebs, the former head of the federal

Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA), whom Trump fired — and for many good reasons. If you want to see his many Deep State ties, check out "Media Darling and Fired Cyber Security Chief Chris Krebs Is a Deep State Operative."

The point of bringing up Taylor and Krebs (out of many examples that could be cited) is to remind everyone that the vast fedgov bureaucracy is infiltrated with many thousands of employees who have followed the lead of James Dennehy, former head of the FBI's New York office, who vowed to "dig in" against Trump. (When he was finally forced out on March 6, Dennehy left defiantly, accompanied by a bagpipe band and dozens of FBI employees. See the MSNBC video of his departure here. Note to Kash Patel: These FBI employees in the Dennehy video are probably good candidates for pink slips.)

Back to Jeffrey Goldberg and his presence on the Signal chat thread. Accidental? It is easier to believe that a pink unicorn is living in a volcano under the Oval Office. More likely there is a mole (a Dennehy, a Taylor, a Krebs, or a Peter Strzok — can't forget him) in the National Security Council who invited Goldberg to the Signal chat for the expressed purpose of creating the current media tempest.

Next week we'll go into more detail on The Atlantic/Goldberg/Emerson Collective/Laurene Powell Jobs/ David G. Bradley/CFR/Deep State connections to the current Signal chat flap. — WFJ

Measles Hysteria: Berenson Skewers NYT

Be afraid; be very afraid: If you're not currently in a panic over climate change, Covid, or bird flu, maybe your fright meter needs a jolt from the latest crisis du jour — measles. Never fear, The New York Times is here.

The Times decided to crank up the measles panic porn with a piece titled, "Why I Got the Measles Vaccine at Age 63," by one Margaret Renkl.

Alex Berenson takes the Times and Renkl to task in his March 25 Substack post, "Never let a (fake) public health crisis go to waste."

"The New York Times takes 2025's measles hysteria past 10, all the way to 11. And the fact it published falsehoods to do so doesn't seem to bother it," Berenson writes.

"Sometimes you can't let the science get in the way of The Science (TM)," he notes, "Or the truth get in the way of a good woke-shaming exercise."

And that, of course, is precisely what the Times/Renkl piece is all about. Was Renkl trying to advance public health?

"No," says Berenson, "Renkl mainly wanted us to know: she's a good person. A very good person. Better than anyone who voted for Donald Trump, for sure." Yes, she's a "moral" human being, unlike those nasty "MAGA movement" people. She writes in the Times article:

> My own safety wasn't my chief concern. Doing everything I can to protect my fellow human beings who cannot be vaccinated ... seems to me to be the only moral thing to do for anyone living in close community with other people. And that's almost all of us.
> Community is a concept that the MAGA movement is working overtime to undo.

Berenson, a bestselling novelist, Substack blogger, and former New York Times reporter, schools Renkl on some facts about measles. Berenson notes:

> The worst measles epidemic in the last 40 years took place in, wait for it, 1989 and 1990, when over 45,000 Americans were infected — almost 200 times as many as have been infected so far this year. A number of children died, too.…

> The epidemic lasted through 1991, when almost 10,000 Americans got measles. Even in 1992, the number was 2,200 — more than the last five years combined.

> So, yeah, Renkl doesn't know what she's talking about.
> But when has that ever stopped a woke public health scold before?

Amid Lawfare & Dem Opposition, Trump Education Order Shifts Duties to Other Agencies

With federal lawsuits flying and Democratic lawmakers vowing to protect the U.S. Department of Education at all costs, President Donald Trump's long-awaited executive order on education is making big waves. But it doesn't do what countless conservatives think it does.

It is true that the workforce is being drastically downsized. However, contrary to many of the superficial headlines portraying the historic decree as an end to federal involvement in government schools, many of the department's most important responsibilities are not actually being shifted to state governments or local school boards.

Instead, just as The Newman Report warned was going to happen a few weeks ago, those duties and the trillions of dollars involved are, in many cases, simply being moved to other federal agencies and departments. Congress will be needed to accomplish much more than that, according to legal analysts.

The March 20 order, titled "Improving Education Outcomes by Empowering Parents, States, and Communities," calls on U.S. Education Secretary Linda McMahon to shrink the department as much as legally possible. It also asks her to "return education authority to the States," but only "to the maximum extent appropriate and permitted by law."

"We want to return our students to the states, where just some of the governors here are so happy about this," Trump said at the signing ceremony, surrounded by children. "They want education to come back to them, to come back to the states, and they're going to do a phenomenal job."

By contrast, Trump's executive order also demands "uninterrupted delivery of services, programs, and benefits on which Americans rely." It was not clear how the federal bootprint in education would be seriously downsized — much less eliminated — while also perpetuating the very "services, programs, and benefits" it administers.

To fulfill those demands, key functions will be moved to other departments. For example, Secretary McMahon just said publicly that she was exploring moving the "civil rights work" to the Department of Justice. Many other functions will be moved to departments such as Health and Human Services, Labor, State, Interior, and more.

The Education Department itself is acknowledging this. According to a public statement, the department will "continue to deliver on all statutory programs that fall under the agency's purview, including formula funding, student loans, Pell Grants, funding for special needs students, and competitive grantmaking."

Trump also admitted as much in the signing ceremony, though few outlets reported it. The department's main functions are "going to be preserved in full and redistributed to various other agencies and departments that will take very good care of them," he said, vowing to will take all lawful steps to shut down the department beyond the "core necessities."

Still, Trump is making his desire for change known. "Unfortunately, the experiment of controlling American education through Federal programs and dollars — and the unaccountable bureaucracy those programs and dollars support — has plainly failed our children, our teachers, and our families," Trump said in the executive order, noting that more than $250 billion was spent on "schools" at the federal level during Covid.

After offering a brief history of how the teachers' union was able to get the department created in 1979 by endorsing Jimmy Carter, Trump presented a small snapshot of just how terrible the system has become at accomplishing its ostensible purpose: helping educate children.

"Today, American reading and math scores are near historical lows," the order explained. "This year's National Assessment of Educational Progress showed that 70 percent of 8th graders were below proficient in reading, and 72 percent were below proficient in math. The Federal education bureaucracy is not working."

"Closing the Department of Education would provide children and their families the opportunity to escape a system that is failing them," Trump said, without noting that families can already escape the system legally in all 50 states.

The order also calls for all federal funding to be cut to any program or activity that has not ended "illegal discrimination obscured under the label 'diversity, equity, and inclusion' or similar terms and programs promoting gender ideology." Numerous grants and funding schemes linked to DEI had already been ended before Trump's new order.

Not surprisingly, Democratic leaders in Congress are fuming. U.S. Senator Chuck Schumer, who leads the Democratic caucus in the Senate, said Trump's agenda to shutter the department was dead-on-arrival in the upper chamber. Some legal analysts suggest it could take 60 votes to overcome Democratic opposition.

Senator Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.), who lied about her ethnicity, offered one of the most unhinged responses. "This is a code red for every public-school student, parent and teacher in this country," she said. "Trump is telling public school kids in America that their futures don't matter."

"Billionaires like Trump and Musk won't feel the difference when after school programs are slashed, class sizes go up and help for families to pay for school gets cut," continued Warren. "But working families, students, and teachers will pay a heavy price."

House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, who would only need a handful of GOP defections to become speaker, issued a similarly apocalyptic statement. "Shutting down the Department of Education will harm millions of children in our nation's public schools, their families and hardworking teachers," he claimed.

Jeffries also vowed to stop Trump's plan. "Congress created the Department of Education and only an act of Congress can eliminate it," he said, ignoring that Congress had no constitutional authority to create it. "We will stop this malignant Republican scheme in the House of Representatives and in the Courts."

Laid off bureaucrats, meanwhile, acting as if they had a right to a government job, are offering suitable sob stories for the far-left establishment media. The goal: tug on the heart strings of Americans to build support for the bureaucracy while painting Trump as a heartless hater of children and education.

"It has been very hard," an anonymous bureaucrat laid off by the administration told ABC News, which falsely described the sprawling and costly bureaucracy as an "already-lean agency." "It really has been hard and heartbreaking because I was planning on having a career with the department."

Lawsuits are already flying, too. The extreme left-wing National Education Association (NEA) representing over 3 million members joined forces with the NAACP and other groups in a bid to have federal courts stop Trump. A group of parents who subject their children to government "education" are also plaintiffs in the case.

"Gutting the Department of Education will hurt all students by sending class sizes soaring, cutting job training programs, making higher education more out of reach, taking away special education services for students with disabilities, and gutting student civil rights protections," complained NEA President Becky Pringle.

The takeaway: Ending unconstitutional federal involvement in education is a baby step in the right direction, of course. However, it does not represent "cutting off the head of the snake," as many conservatives claim to believe. Not even close.

Instead, the government "education" monster that is deliberately dumbing down, indoctrinating, and sexualizing children should be seen as a hydra. The federal tentacle is just one among many. Others include teachers' unions, state agencies, UNESCO, woke publishers, and more.

In any case, while getting the feds out of the classrooms would be a worthwhile effort, that must not be the end of the reforms. Instead, the ultimate goal should be to have parents in charge of their own children's education — not state or even local government. — AN

China: Aggressive Claims to Philippine Islands

Communist China's "Nine Dash Line" just got a makeover, if Chinese online propaganda is to be believed. In its latest effort to intimidate its neighbors, China is now claiming the Philippine island of Palawan and part of the Philippine Sea as national territory, a move that has angered the Philippines but is no surprise to those of us who have followed Chinese irredentism for years. Palawan, a beautiful dagger-shaped island in the southwest part of the Philippines archipelago, has long been attractive to tourists (this author has visited it twice). Palawan's northwestern coast fronts the South China Sea (or the West Philippine Sea, as they call it in Manila), and is the closest territory to the disputed Scarborough Shoal, where China has been openly attacking Philippine vessels resupplying a small contingent of marines stationed on a rusting naval ship deliberately grounded there years ago to serve as a base. The shoal is well within the Philippines' exclusive economic zone, but the Chinese, seeking uncontested control over the entire South China Sea, have been engaging in hostilities there for several years, sensing that neither the Philippines nor the United States will do anything about it.

China's claim on Palawan (and also, incidentally, the Philippines' Sulu Archipelago and the Zamboanga Peninsula further south) are not new, and have been found on maps dating back decades. The position of China's government is that any territory that ever belonged to any Chinese authority, or ever had been a tributary to any Chinese emperor, rightfully belongs to China. This means that China claims rightful sovereignty over nearly all of mainland southeast Asia, Singapore, the Malaysian state of Sarawak and Sabah on northern Borneo, the western and southwestern parts of the Philippines, and all territory with Tibetan ethnic groups (including northeast India's Arunachal Pradesh and Sikkim, the Himalayan kingdom of Bhutan, a substantial part of Nepal, and the Indian state of Ladakh). China also lays claim to parts of central Asia, including much of Kazakhstan and the other "stans," all of Mongolia, and southeastern Siberia, including Russia's Vladivostok and the Sikhote Alin region.

Some of these claims are based on the fact that the Yuan Dynasty (the name the Chinese gave to the Mongol conquerors) also controlled some of these territories centuries ago. Others are based on tributary agreements, or the antiquity of Chinese trading communities (on Borneo, for example, where it was the Chinese who fought against the English "white rajah" who colonized the area, or in Malaysia, where it was primarily Chinese communist rebels drawn from large populations of miners and merchants who tried to communize Malaysia during the "Emergency").

Nowadays, such claims do not seem terribly threatening, because communist China has militarily been a paper tiger for so long. But times are changing. The ongoing manufacture of a new flotilla of landing craft, only recently brought to light by the Western press, suggests that the dragon does not intend to remain tethered much longer. And if it tries to prosecute its claims by force against Japan, Taiwan, or the Philippines, it is hard to imagine that the United States will not be drawn in. — SB

Argentina: Milei Opens WWII Nazi Files

Argentine president Javier Milei has announced the declassification of a trove of documents related to the settlement of Nazis in Argentina at the end of World War II. It is estimated that as many as 5,000 Nazi "war criminals," including notorious members of Hitler's regime such as Adolph Eichmann and Josef Mengele, found their way to Argentina via secret international networks whose exact workings are still obscure. It is believed that the Argentine documents may also shed light on how the American government managed to smuggle prominent Nazi scientists into the United States for military, medical, and space research. Given Milei's strong sympathy for Israel and interest in Judaism, it is hardly surprising that he would support such transparency. — SB

Canada: New Globalist PM Carney Calls for Snap Elections

In an obvious gambit to maintain a globalist foothold in North America, Canada's bankster-turned-prime minister Mark Carney has called for snap elections, hoping that the Canadian backlash against Trump's tariffs and "51st state" talk will enable the Liberal Party to stay in power and deny up-and-coming conservative and internet sensation Pierre Poilievre the prime minister's seat. For months, the outspoken and articulate Poilievre has looked to become Canada's answer to Trump or Argentina's Milei, with his devastating rhetorical smackdowns of the hapless Justin Trudeau and his troupe of woke Liberal mountebanks.

But now that Trudeau has handed over power to Carney, the game has changed. Carney, a Harvard- and Oxford-educated central banker who did stints as the governor of both the Bank of Canada and the Bank of England, is being touted as the suave, savvy, omnicompetent new face of the Liberal Party, the responsible choice against the supposedly reckless, pro-free market, and pro-liberty Poilievre.

And Carney, an archetypal globalist insider, is buoyed in Canadian polls by Trump's oddly timed attacks on Canada, coupled with Trump's very public dislike of Poilievre — who, it turns out, has a mind of his own and, unlike a number of other conservative Western leaders, has shown little inclination to kiss Trump's ring.

For these reasons, a Conservative win in the upcoming elections, slated for April 28, is no longer the foregone conclusion it was shaping up to be only months ago. It may well be that, despite Canada's years of suffering under Trudeau and the Liberals — including the hated carbon tax, suppression of free speech, crackdown on civil liberties, cratering wages, and many other ills — the Canadian citizenry, like sufferers of Stockholm Syndrome everywhere, will conclude they are better off with a familiar oppressor, and return, yet again, like the proverbial dog to its vomit.

As for the globalist supporters of Carney, they are doubtless hoping to make Ottawa a beachhead for retaking North America from the bane of Trumpian populism. Whether Trump's ill-timed sabotaging of the Conservatives' chances is being enabled by globalists in his own party is an open and intriguing question. — SB

Geneva Downsizing as USAID Cuts Hit UN Agencies, NGOs

Good news: Lots of tears are being shed for the poor UN "world servants" in their luxury digs in Geneva, Switzerland. The Trump USAID cuts are bringing lots of anxiety, anger, maledictions, and recriminations as well. The pampered, privileged, perfumed virtue-signalers are very, very worried and angry; their U.S. gravy train has stopped servicing the Geneva junction. Boo-hoo, boo-hoo, it's so heartrending!

Among the lachrymose reporting is a March 25 piece from Bloomberg titled "Trump Slashed International Aid. Geneva Is Feeling the Impact." We read that "The longtime epicenter of global public health, peacemaking and diplomacy is being squeezed by budget cuts that could redefine its identity." From the article:

> The president pulled the US out of the World Health Organization — which received $1.3 billion from the government for its last two-year period — and moved to cancel most contracts held by US Agency for International Development, an effort that's currently being challenged in court.
> These changes were immediately felt in the canton. In addition to being where the Geneva Conventions were signed and the first thaw in the Cold War took place, the city is also home to 38 international organizations that employ 29,000 people, spend some $7 billion each year and support around 400 NGOs. Up until recently, that ecosystem received generous assistance from the US.

"Generous assistance" indeed. The UN's Palace of Nations is but one of the many extravagant palatial abodes for the UN constellation of international agencies and NGOs, such as the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, World Health Organization, International Labor Organization, International Organization for Migration, World Trade Organization, World Meteorological Organization, World Economic Forum, International Union for the Conservation of Nature, World Wide Fund for Nature (formerly the World Wildlife Fund, WWF), and many more. If you've been to Geneva, you've undoubtedly seen the amazing edifices and beautiful campuses our tax dollars have built for these wonderful, selfless folks. If you want to get a better idea of what's really going on in this lovely city on the banks of beautiful Lake Geneva, see our article "The United Nations: On the Brink of Becoming a World Government," which is available as a downloadable reprint here and includes photos not in the online version of the UN palaces in Geneva and around the world.

The migrationist lobby is especially tearful. Associated Press has a weepy story warning that "Millions of people and hundreds of staff impacted by US aid cuts, UN migration agency says." It's all about the Geneva-based International Organization for Migration (IOM). "The agency, led by American Amy Pope, got more than 40% of its $3.4 billion budget in 2023 from the U.S.," AP reports. IOM is laying off 20 percent of its Geneva headquarters staff and says it will have to cut its employees worldwide (now numbering 6,000). To learn the straight skinny on the former Obama/Biden apparatchik (and CFR member) and her role in sending a tidal wave of migrants across our southern border, see "The Biden-UN Immigration Invasion Scheme. And for a close-up, in-person view of how the IOM and its sister agencies and NGOs have been encouraging the human trafficking trade (including the sex-marketing of children) and enticing millions of people to put their lives in jeopardy, see the excellent documentary "Inside the Darién Gap | AGENDA 2030 MASS MIGRATION PLAN EXPOSED by Muckraker that powerfully exposes the IOM, UN, and NGO roles in fomenting mass migration. — WFJ

Wisconsin Supreme Court Race Could Flip U.S. House Blue?

April 1 could bring a wicked April Fools Day trick if far-left Democrat Susan Crawford wins the highly contentious Wisconsin Supreme Court race. George Soros, Illinois Governor JB Pritzker, LinkedIn founder Reid Hoffman, and other billionaire leftists have pumped millions of dollars into Crawford's campaign to defeat conservative Republican Brad Schimel. It's a big chess move. If Crawford wins, the concern is she will follow the path of liberal Supreme Court Justice Janet Protasiewicz, who won a seat with the Supremes in 2023 giving the "progressives" a 4-3 majority. That majority then sided with a leftist lawsuit demanding that the state's district boundaries be redrawn. The result: Democrats gained 14 seats from the court-enabled gerrymandering. Now the fear is Crawford's addition to the court would almost certainly bring about a similar suit to change Wisconsin's reapportionment for its U.S. House seats. That could flip the GOP's slim House majority, which is now 218-213. But several vacancies where special elections are pending could make that margin even thinner. A Wisconsin gerrymander could push the House into Blue Dem territory. For details, see Paul Dragu's "Wisconsin Judicial Race Can Swing U.S. House to Dems in 2026." — WFJ

Worth Noting:

Dr. Stella Emmanuel, M.D. tweets:

> The government did more to stop the distribution of Ivermectin and Hydroxycloroquine than it did to stop the distribution of Fentanyl.

Judicial Tyranny: What to Do?

The black-robed malfeasance that has been ravaging our nation for decades is a result of the abdication of duty by Congress, as a result of ignorance, cowardice, and convenience. Congress is aided and abetted in allowing the courts to usurp powers by an ignorant and complacent citizenry that fails to hold their elected representatives accountable. The Constitution provides four checks on Judicial power: appointment, impeachment, abolition, and limitation. Much of the outrage of the moment is being channeled by Congressional GOP leaders into impeachment and abolition efforts. Much more appropriate, practical, and likely to succeed is the limitation route. By a simple majority of both houses, Congress can employ its powers under Article III, Section 2, which provides that Congress may limit federal judicial jurisdiction. The Supreme Court and lower courts have jurisdiction "with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." For a more detailed explication of the subject see "Judicial Usurpation," originally published in The New American in 1997. — WFJ

The Resurrection of The Christ — Mel Gibson will start shooting The Resurrection of The Christ, his long-awaited sequel to his 2004 The Passion of The Christ, in August, Variety reported on its website March 26. A blockbuster, The Passion earned $612 million at the worldwide box office, making it the highest-grossing independent film of all time. Jim Caviezel, who is expected to reprise his role as Jesus in the sequel, predicted in 2018 that The Resurrection "is going to be the biggest film in history. It's that good." But no matter how good The Passion was, or how good the sequel may be, Variety could not resist exposing its leftist fangs by sneering, "the [original] film was considered antisemitic due to its implication that Jewish leaders were to blame for Jesus' death." Nonsense! In reality, if The Passion was antisemitic, then the Gospels were antisemitic, as well. — GB
